Soviets Make 50-Mile Gain In Caucasus

Don't know we're not confirmed yet. Neither communiques nor battle-front dispatches mentioned these sectors.

Dispatches announcing the recapture of Novo Blagoderoyev placed the Russian advance more than 20 miles west of the Sea level of Mineralnye Vody, recaptured after this week.

And the army of the offensive swept through Kumyskurg and past Zhuravskaya, 50 miles north of Mineralnye Vody.

In between, on the straightened front, the Russians reported the towns of Kalaborka, Orbelian and Pologovskaya, some of the most intensively farmed land in the Caucasus.

Royalist Plot For Monarchy In Africa Fails

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—(AP)—A French Royalist plot to set up a monarchy in Africa has failed and some French Royalists have been implicated in the plot, according to a broadcast from Algiers.

Collingwood said Britain apparently had no role in the plot, but he added the Royalists included men in "high places" in North Africa and the apparently hoped to set up the Count of Paris, who has been in Algiers for some time under an assumed name, as king over a French monarchy in North Africa.

Plot Went Wrong

However, Collingwood said, something went wrong. The Count was never actually crowned. Collingwood said that even since the Americans landed in North Africa there has been a "strong feeling for the chance to control France."

On the one side were the Liberals and Republicans, the men who were most anxious to have a monarchy. On the other side, to gain by our coming, since they and we stood for the same thing, the French Royalists, who were the remnants of Vichy, the Fascist and semi-Fascist, and outside of these two groups, the French who were the Royalists.

The British foreign office is not backing the French. The British government is not backing the French. The British government is not backing the French.

He declared neither London nor Washington is obstructing a meeting between Gen. Henri Giraud, the French high commissioner in North Africa, and Gen. Charles de Gaulle, fighting French leader. On the contrary, the British and United States governments are working towards such a meeting.

Dismissing talk that the premier in North Africa of the R.A.F., pretender to the non-existent French throne, had anything to do with the situation, the communiqué said: "Tunisia is the best place to get on with the job as we can open a second front somewhere on the continent of Europe."

"Both our governments realize a second front will require enormous sacrifices of manpower and we are prepared for it."

He said that work on the railway line between the two fronts was continuing subsequent to Thursday's operations, as the removal of the railway line would result in the stoppage of the railway traffic.

LAST TRAIN FROM BERLIN

BY HOWARD K. SMITH

There, even the big floral shop, Bismarck-Schmidt, on the main street, is empty. I went in there in November to buy some flowers for a friend's birthday, and when I saw how it was I told the salesgirl, my God, it's 12. She said, yes, she was sorry, but I'd just been killed and every time there is a state funeral they clean out not only the shop but also the houses. A little later I went back, but it was still empty and the manager was sorry butModifiers had just been killed. I suppose if I had gone back later, she would have said, sorry, but von Reuth, ensu, then sorry, but Todt, and so on. Luck never changes, it continues being good.

JUST REMODELED

Turning off Unter den Linden to the left down the Potsdamer street, Wilhelmstrasse, you can see the only freshly painted building in Berlin: Ribbentrop's ugly yellow palace, with ugly yellow snakes wrapped symbolically around spheres, that look like the world on its front pillars. He has just had it remodeled. All the rest of the buildings are getting dirty even Dr. Goebbels' formerly snowy white propaganda palace.

After six o'clock, you can't walk on the side of the street where the Fuehrer's house is located. A cordon of policemen makes you cross the street, for they are afraid of bombs after dark, even when the Fuehrer is not at home. The Fuehrer's yellow-brown chancellery is still the same except that the enormous brown doors on its front have been removed and melted down for the arms industry and replaced with big, brown wooden doors.

The last building on the street before you turn is where the New York Herald-Tribune office was until the Tribune's correspondent Ralph Barnes was kicked out after saying German-Russian relations were not so cordial and might lead to an eventual conflict. Every time the place is kicked out, the last night I spent with him in his office before he caught the train, drinking cognac because he was very sad about being thrown out. Berlin was a good spot, then. He was killed in Greece. He would have liked seeing Berlin as it is now.

WINDY SMOKE

To the left of Potsdamer Strasse and parallel with it lie the railway tracks from the Potsdamer station. Across them is a huge, long viaduct for the electric and tram, it evenings, you get the best picture of industry and activity in all Berlin, looking down on a maze of criss-crossing railway tracks and a forest of smokestacks with tall chimneys and each coach is clearly marked with a red cross on a white circle; hospital trains unloading maimed Germans from the Eastern front to be taken to hospitals in Berlin.

One night late when I was going home on the electric and the train passed over these coaches, a wild-eyed old hanger, drunk as a crocodile and pointed to them and said: "From France we got silk stockings. From Russia we got this damn Russians must not have any silk stockings, what?" He was lucky he picked on me to say this to, or he would have had his hangover in Alexander Platz prison the next morning. There are other cynical Berliners who say, however, that the coaches are not unloading anything, that they're just left there on the sidings to discourage the British from dropping bombs on the Potsdamer station. But I've seen them unloading.

Dancing is strictly forbidden everywhere for the duration of the Russian war. Nevertheless, a few joints maintain "hostesses" who sit and drink with tired Party Men. The hostesses are a bit on the shady side. For one thing, gowns are being worn shorter this season. It is impossible to buy new gowns and to the girls simply had to chop off the worn edges of their old ones and put in new hems, higher up.

Theatres and show-buses out to the West End are packed over-full every night. People haven't anything else to spend their money on, so even the worst show in town is sold-out every night. The big variety houses, the Scala and the Wintergarten, are having a hard time finding enough talent to fill their bills, as narrowed by a whole host of Nazi decrees since the beginning of the war. Fortune-tellers, crystal gazers and all kinds of stage magicians used to be popular with German audiences, but when Hea came to Scotland, Goebbels banned them all for ever from German show-buses because it was said that one of these affected Hea's decision to go. Another big favorite were fortune-tellers who specialized in shady political picks, but these too were forbidden by Goebbels after a while. Favorite music was American jazz and swing, but these too were forbidden by Goebbels after a while. Propaganda films were made by the German film industry for the purpose of influencing the public. The most famous of these were the "Goebbels" films, which were made by the German film industry for the purpose of influencing the public.

Cinemas are not as popular, principally for the reason that they do not take people's minds off war. Once the Nazi film dictators made the mistake of allowing a very visible measure of what the public like to think of their propaganda films by opening a second-rate comedy called the "Goebbels" film, which was a comedy about the life of a German soldier in the front. The film was a comedy about the life of a German soldier in the front.

Then Goebbels began receiving letters expressing thanks, but asking for more home-front sequences and fewer war ones, especially to leave out the shots of dead bodies on battlefields.

The map, above, shows the northern sector of the Tunisian battle front and locates the point at which British forces stormed and captured strongly defended heights from the Germans. It is still very hard to draw the battle line in this area, as there is no continuous contact between the main forces, and the armed patrols of each side frequently penetrate into territory behind the advance forces of the other.

Lille Pounded

400 Planes Hit France, Holland

By EDWARD D. BALL

LONDON, Jan. 14.—(AP)—Large bomber forces and Allied fighters—nearly 400 in all—made one of the greatest series of daylight raids of the war yesterday on occupied France and Holland.

The heaviest attack was delivered by four-engine bombers which bored through swarms of German fighters to register many direct hits on industrial plants at Lille.

Three were missing from the R.A.F. fighters failed to return from Holland. Three enemy planes were shot down.

Nazis Report Red Drives on 3 New Fronts

By WILLIAM B. DICKINSON

Kiev to the Edmonton Bulletin

LONDON, Jan. 14.—Germany reported new Russian offensives on three fronts today, admitted reverses on four fronts and indicated that Adolf Hitler was becoming desperate in his search through the satellite Balkans for more fighting men.

German broadcasts reported that the Russians were attacking at Voronezh, 200 miles northwest of Stalingrad, an anchor point of the German line in the Tisza river of the Black Sea and around Leningrad.

Breaks in the German line, though the Nazis minimized their importance, were admitted on the Voronezh, Tisza and Leningrad fronts, and on the Stalingrad-Don front.

USING UP RESERVES

Stockholm dispatches reported that the Germans were evacuating generals and staff officers by plane from the pocket west of Stalingrad, leaving colonels instead of major generals to command divisions and lieutenant colonels instead of majors to command battalions.

These reports said the Russians had thrown at least 30,000 strategic reserves into their offensives.

A series of German broadcasts discussed the conference between Hitler and Marshal Ion Antonescu, Romanian dictator. The Hungarian and Bulgarian war ministers already had visited Hitler, according to reports, and Berlin announced that the finance minister of the Croat puppet regime in Yugoslavia had been called to Berlin. It was expected that the secretary general of the Spanish Falange party, would leave for Berlin tomorrow.

PUTS ON PRESSURE

There seemed little doubt that Hitler was exerting all possible pressure on Rumania and Hungary to send more men to the Russian front and was meeting with stubborn resistance. He was apparently urging Bulgaria to send men to Russia and, in Antonescu's case, German emphasis on the value of Rumanian oil indicated that he was trying to squeeze more gasoline out of Rumania.

Instead of heading the hunt in the dark, newspaper editors that closer co-operation with Germany was desirable. Spain published an official Red book on the recent Spanish-Portuguese discussions of the formation of an Iberian bloc.

Germany's situation was complicated by increasing firmness of other countries toward its policies. The Swedish newspaper, Dagen Nyheter yesterday attacked Fritz Sauckel, German labor leader, who suggested that neutral send workers to Germany.

"The neutrals need their work."

At the result of the German attack, which was expected, Germany was expected to receive much less chrome and other goods which it urgently needs from Turkey, had changed specifications, men's Motor Corps office. Although it was not. "We are unable to care for them. Will you please adjust them?" The Corps did.

The Bulletin's Sports Show by Hal Dean

While the rules committee of the C.A.H.A. probably would be the first to acknowledge that the existing hockey laws are far from perfect, just why the present regulations (where an opposing player has been trapped in the defending zone) have been allowed to remain on the books is still one of those unsolved mysteries.

It is neither justifiable nor reasonable that a referee should be forced to blow his whistle and then immediately follow the defending side in possession of the puck, just because an opposing player is caught over the line and is not attempting to interfere and in fact runs his utmost to get back into the neutral zone.

Right to use their discretion in situations of this kind should be restored to officials as was the case formerly. It would do away with a lot of delays which occur in almost every game and furthermore would not be penalizing the defenders as is now the rule. The referees on the only line possession of the puck, but an opportunity is given to the original attackers to bring up and re-align their forces.

Would Cancel Ruling Re Colts
MILWAUKEE, Jan. 14.—(AP)—Big Bill Chandler, Marquette University basketball coach, has started a one-man campaign for elimination of the rule that removes a player from a game after four personal fouls.

Chandler proposes that basketball adopt a "penalty box" rule similar to that in hockey in place of the four-foul rule. He suggests that, on the fourth foul a player be removed from the game for a specified time, perhaps 15 minutes. During that period a male could be substituted for the offender.

Chandler, the best players for the Milwaukee Bucks, has been playing aggressively, foul more than those that are moderate. They have to the way the game is played nowadays.

"It is a silly contention that a player can be removed from the game for a specified time, perhaps 15 minutes. During that period a male could be substituted for the offender."

DOROTHY DIX SAYS—

Consideration Always Makes Happy Mates

Most Men and Women Will Endure Strangers But Always Revolt at Same Tactics by Their Own Mates

One of the most beautiful sights in the world is a happy family in which the husband and wife treat each other with tenderness and consideration, in which the children are like little birds in their nests and in which the in-laws are cherished, instead of being made targets for perpetual criticism.

Yet such a spectacle is so rare as to be almost a museum specimen that we would go miles to see. Most of the homes with which we are familiar are places of turmoil and strife in which the husband and wife argue and bicker, and the children fight, and in which everyone frowns when they want to enjoy themselves. Viewing how they treat each other, any stranger would be justified in thinking that the average husband and wife were about the point of divorce, and that the brothers and sisters were about to commit mayhem upon each other.

But such is far from the case. Strange as it may be, the average wives who make their marriage a hell on earth for each other still love each other. We have all seen women who nagged their husbands into the grave more than bitterly when they were dead and men who had never said a kind word to their wives while they were alive spend their time singing their praises when they were dead. It is an axiom that the more how much brothers and sisters may fight amongst themselves, they will love up on any outside who attacks one of their group.

STROESTRONG BONDS

Now we all know that there is no other happiness so pure and unalloyed as that we find in our own households, that there is no other happiness that we can trust so completely as that of those who are bound to us by the blood tie, and the longing of every human heart for a peaceful home in which to live with those we love and who love us.

Why, then, do we so seldom realize that I think it is because bad manners reach their highest level in the home circle. Because the general opinion prevails that it is not necessary to even be commonly polite to your own kin and kind, and that home is a place where you can cast aside the niceties of the manners of civilization and be just as rude and disagreeable as you please.

No man would dream of speaking to any other woman with the brutal frankness that he does to his wife. A man will listen with an expression of abhorrence to the remarks of a stranger woman, with the intellect of a hyena, but he will listen to his wife with the same intellect and on and on. But let his wife express an opinion which he disagrees, and he will tell her what she is doing, and how what she is talking about. No man goes about telling other women what they are getting fat, or that their new frock is ten years too young for them, or that their hair looks like something they bought off a circus clown, but the very husbands who are so careful not to tread on other women's sensibilities will walk roughshod over their wives.

Now are wives any more tactful in dealing with their husbands? Most wives don't even think it worthwhile to dress up for a mere

Your Baby And Mine Victory Special Is Boston Beans, Bread

By MYRTLE MEYER ELDER

By the first year of a child's life everything which relates to the regime of the mouth is planning for the child. This is nature's way of insuring that the child will get necessary nourishment by making the tongue and lips easily susceptible to outside stimuli.

Obviously, thumb-sucking or sucking upon any object is a satisfaction to the child. This sucking not only inspires the child to make the effort to get nourishment, but incidentally develops the baby's under-developed jaw.

As the child grows old enough to eat solids, instead of milking it in drops, there is a decreasing desire to make this exertion. Then all sucking habits, including thumb or finger-sucking, tend to be abandoned. That they are not often the fault of parents who have discouraged or thwarted the child's indulgence in sucking. Those parents aware in the child a persistent inclination to suck at a determination, unconquerable habit.

Mrs. A. M. P. wishes I would write something about the habit of thumb-sucking. It affects her 2½-year-old granddaughter, who, as she writes, "sucks her thumb all night."

One must feel that a habit which is indulged in so strenuously has been influenced by other factors than the fact that the child will nourish! That means more than just that to satisfy the child's appetite it means all the necessary growth foods, plus adequate vitamins daily.

What about companions? Children who play with other children are too busy to spend their time thumb-sucking. If they do, other children make fun of them, and this is a greater incentive to stop the habit than anything a parent could do or say.

Don't she get outdoors every single day to play or walk or ride on her baby car? This type of exercise should make sleeping come so much more easily and be so much sounder than an "all night" indulgence in thumb-sucking would be an absurdity.

If the child does not thumb-suck during the daytime and indulges only when asleep, it is not a habit itself should be ignored—after all, it is a means of relieving tension—the parents should direct their efforts at increasing her health and increasing her physical recreation. They may expect the habit will die away because the child will be sleeping soundly most of the night.

My letter, "Thumb-sucking," discloses this habit as it affects older and younger children. You may want a free copy by sending a self-addressed, three-cent stamped envelope with your request to: "Your Baby and Mine" department of this newspaper.

Many guests refuse to use the fancy guest towels that thoughtful entertainers provide.

The only real solution to this problem that I know would be to remove the towels from the bathroom and that force your guests to use the towels you provide for their use.

Perhaps your guest towels are so pretty and fancy that they discourage the use of the towels. Try plain linen ones—or better still—because they will work—wide fabric paper guest towels for your friends. These are available in most attractive patterns or you may have monogrammed ones if you prefer.

McCoy Health Service

Vincent's gingivitis is popularly known as trench mouth and the immediate cause is an infection due to the presence of the two causative organisms, the fusiform bacillus and the spirochete. Vincent's gingivitis is also called Vincent's infection and is a very serious disease.

This is one of the most common diseases of the gums, occurring in both an acute and a chronic form. It must be remembered that trench mouth is the only one of the gum diseases which is contagious. Due to the ease with which the infection is transmitted from one patient to another, it is widespread in institutions, or places where many people are crowded together. The infection may spread through using drinking glasses, dishes, towels, or brushes which have also been used by the patient with Vincent's gingivitis.

There is considerable evidence to believe that the disease may be caused by bacteria.

The gum tissue is called the gingiva and the term gingivitis therefore refers to inflammation of the gum. The gum is composed of fibrous tissue which is in turn covered by a continuation of the mucous membrane which lines the mouth.

The chief purpose of the gum is to give support to the teeth and to the alveolar processes which latter processes form the sockets in which the roots of the teeth are fixed.

When the gum is firm and healthy, the necks of the teeth adequately support, adheres to the teeth firmly and upon pressure will bleed, hard, rather than soft and spongy.

When the patient has Vincent's gingivitis there occurs a destruction of the soft tissue in the acute cases in the gum so that the gum no longer adheres firmly to the tooth. In time it will recede and the neck of the tooth will be exposed.

The symptoms of Vincent's gingivitis vary considerably, depending to a great extent upon whether an acute or chronic case is present. In the acute infection, the patient has a severe pain in the gums, which is extremely painful and may, or may not, be accompanied by constitutional symptoms such as fever and lassitude. In the chronic case, the patient has a less severe pain, but which will put off treatment for years.

As the immediate cause of trench mouth is an infection, local treatment is given to the gums for the purpose of killing the infective organisms. The infective organisms are the fusiform bacillus and the spirochete of Vincent and when the disease has developed, these two organisms will be found in the gums in greatly increased numbers when a laboratory test is made. The diagnosis may be made by finding these organisms in the test smear together with the finding of clinical changes in the gum tissue.

The chronic form of the disease is known as Vincent's gingivitis.

is painless as a general rule and the two main symptoms are bleeding of the gums and a disruption of the soft tissue of the mouth which is a highly unpleasant odor. The symptoms of the acute form of the disease are pain and the patient notices that patches of white or grayish slough have formed on the gum tissue. When the case of gingivitis is a chronic one, the sloughs are not so extensive and the surface will be exposed. An outstanding symptom is the presence of a peculiar, fetid, unpleasant odor of the mouth. This odor is characteristic of the disease and is a reliable sign in making the diagnosis.

The local treatment as given by the average dentist consists in the vigorous use of certain antiseptic preparations. Two of the substances commonly used are hydrogen peroxide and sodium perborate. I do not particularly advise home treatment and the best plan is to secure specific advice to fit your case from your dentist. The local treatment is usually prescribed by a dentist, unless the infection is a mild one, in which case the patient is advised to use the antiseptic.

All questions regarding health and diet will be answered. Large clippings of the material will be enclosed. Write on one side of paper only. Letters must not exceed 100 words. Address: McCoy Health Service, The McCoy Building, 1151 West 6th Street, Los Angeles, Calif.

Raids Increase as Weather Improves

Targets for Allies' Aerial Blows Against Germany

Under all conditions, from the cold wastes of Alaska to the hot sands of African deserts, R.C.A.F. ground crews must "keep 'em flying." Mechanics are shown installing an engine in a Bellingham bomber.

Putting Punch in Australian Air Arm

Vigorous scrappers, swift P-38 fighters like this one being unloaded in Australia, are adding plenty of drive to the battle against the Japs.

Transport Burns—Vital Cargo Saved

Remember the Army Mule?—He's Still Here

Japs may come and Japs may jump, but the Army mule is still the best means of artillery transport over mountainous terrain, down narrow trails and in jungles—all found in abundance in this war. The mule is still as stubborn as ever, too, these tugging soldiers find.

Mrs. Collier Young, a Canadian girl, has an important post in the U.S. Civilian Defence Fourth Fighter Command. She is superintendent of a team of 100 women volunteers in the aircraft warning service in Los Angeles.

Escaped Nazis?

Albert Lebrun, president of France at the outbreak of war in 1939, is reported to have escaped from Nazis in occupied France and arrived in North Africa.

Glamor Hen

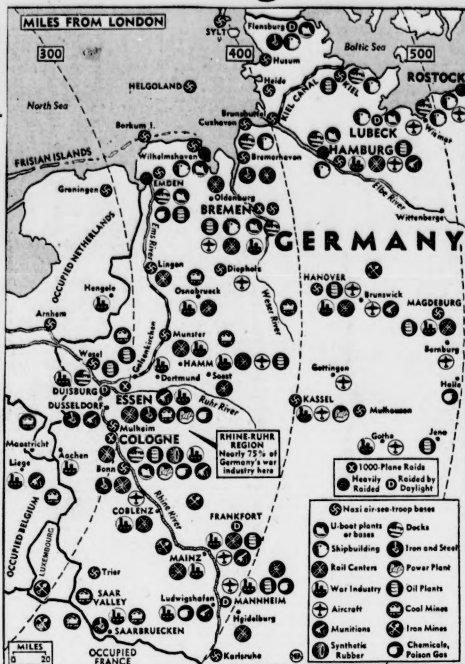

All dressed up and going places in Berlin, glamor girl of a British Ministry of Agriculture movie. Donning best bib and tucker she heads for London, complaints of short rations, learns about scrap drives.

Removing Fuses

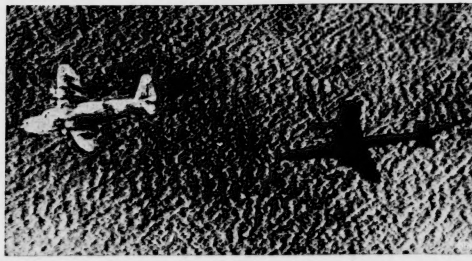

In face of a determined Soviet winter offensive, the Nazis are reported to be withdrawing on most Russian fronts, abandoning large quantities of equipment. But they also leave concealed land mines to cover their retreat, and a Soviet soldier is shown extracting fuses to render German mines useless.

Already heavily raided or potential targets of British, Canadian and American bombers, the centres pictured above will get more and heavier blows from the air as spring and summer bring improved bombing weather to Western Europe.

Shadow of Death Over Enemy Submarines

Its shadow following it across a billowy sea, a giant Sunderland plane, largest flying boat of the British Coastal Command, keeps a close watch for enemy submarines and merchant shipping.

Resolutions Worth Keeping

Army bombardiers at San Angelo, Tex., set an ambitious program for themselves in 1943. If they keep all these resolutions, they'll probably win the war all by themselves. Here cadets look over the list, which is topped by bomb-riding mascot Bugs Bunny, movie cartoon and newspaper comic character.

HOLLYWOOD. — Filmfare's Starling of 1942 today embraces six young film actresses who have gained admittance to the exclusive circle through their 1942 screen achievements. The sextette includes Louise Allbritton, Elyse Knox, Marjorie Lord, Peggy Ryan, Jennifer Holt and Grace McDonald, top to bottom in above picture.

Producers and directors brought the new organization into being at Universal studios as the first token of motion picture progress of the present season. Plans call for each of these young ladies to be cast in even more important roles in 1943.

Louise Allbritton made her way into the magic circle via film recognition after a four-year stage apprenticeship at the Pasadena Community Playhouse. Among her 1942 pictures was "Who Done It?"

Jennifer Holt was picture-bound practically from birth, being the daughter of the silver-screen's famous Jack Holt and sister of Tim Holt.

Elyse Knox probably has had her photograph viewed by more people in the United States than any current actress — smiling from billboards and magazine covers by the hundreds. She has had top roles in several pictures this year, including "The Mummy's Tomb" and "Bad Company."

Marjorie Lord is from the stage. Her 1942 film performances included "Moonlight in Havana" and in 1943 she will appear in "Sherlock Holmes in Washington."

It took breaking up one of the nation's most famous brother-sister dance teams to get Grace McDonald into the movies. Since her movie debut, Grace has been seen in "It Ain't Hay" and now is scheduled for "Flesh and Fantasy."

Peggy Ryan is the youngest of the select six. She practically grew up on the stage. Her outstanding portrayal this year was in "Get Her To Love" and next she will appear in "When Johnny Comes Marching Home."

Beach Peach

January is no time to talk of lifeguards, but nevertheless we have here Mary Donovan of Venice, Calif., whose business is saving swimmers.
